

County Asks Priority For Carson Crossing

County supervisors have adopted a resolution asking that top priority be given for a bridge which would alleviate delays in traffic flow due to railroad movements in the Carson area.

According to Supervisor Burton W. Chace, the board has asked the California Public Utilities Commission to give the bridge at 223rd Street near Alameda top priority.

"The county wants the to fund a $5 million crossing so traffic will not have to wait during train movements," Chace said. "This matter should have immediate consideration."

The bridge would contain a four-lane, curbed and divided roadway with sidewalks to cross the tracks.

"There are an average of 14 trains per day—plus constant switching movements across 223rd Street near the S. P. Dolores Yard north of 223rd," Chace said.

"The completed crossing will increase the safety factor, cut down traffic congestion and improve the traffic flow on this key highway," Chace said.

A total of 10,000 vehicles use this street across the railroad tracks daily, Chace pointed out.
